DTIC® Overview

The Defense Technical Information Center (DTIC) is a Department of Defense (DoD) Field Activity aligned with the Director, Defense Research and Engineering (DDR&E). The premier provider of DoD scientific and technical information, DTIC has served the information needs of the defense community for more than 60 years. Search DTIC and DoD scientific and technical information using DTIC's Search page at www.dtic.mil and find the DTIC home page at www.dtic.mil/dtic/index.html.

Anyone with Web access can search the Center's public collections and display or download information using DTIC's Public Scientific and Technical Information Network (STINET®) at <http://stinet.dtic.mil>. Eligible DTIC registered users can find a wealth of limited and classified information. For details, go to www.dtic.mil/dtic/registration.

What does DTIC do?

- Supports the Research & Engineering (R&E) Portal (<https://rdte.osd.mil>), a single-point access to current DoD R&E project information and the central repository for DoD collected data
- Provides scientific and technical information in specialized subject areas through its Information Analysis Centers (IACs) (<http://iac.dtic.mil/index.html>)
- Collects, consolidates, indexes, and provides controlled access to DoD scientific, technical, research, and engineering information
- Serves as a vital link in information transfer among defense-related government and civilian research and development communities
- Designs and hosts more than 100 DoD Web sites
- Provides customized retrieval and referral services
