

Spring Exposition 2013

Channeling Content in an Integrated World

The channels of information continue to revolve from print and electronic to media, data sets and analytics, and back again through mobile applications and social media. Meanwhile, research has evolved as an interdisciplinary process in an interconnected content world.

Join your colleagues for a multi-dimensional training that tackles these issues and explores today's questions.

How do we provide the right type of content and, increasingly, how do we combine the various formats into new services for patrons?

What is in our future as our patrons and our agencies move into this new world of increased mobility and increased social networking?

What can librarians do to enhance this combination of learning from multiple disciplines? How do we train ourselves to think in an interdisciplinary world?

As leaders in this era of multiple content channels, are we prepared for the transition to professionals who are adept at developing, configuring, and delivering services that are timely and accurate?