

Connecting American Indian and Federal Libraries

Join your colleagues for a celebration of Native American Heritage Month showcasing three Native American research and resource organizations and nearly 20 presenters from the tribal, federal, and scholarly communities.

The program will begin with presentations from FEDLINK's American Indian Library Initiative (AILI). Now entering its second year, AILI is a standing working group on American Indian Libraries continues its efforts to identify and establish networks of federal efforts of value to American Indian Libraries including preservation, digitization, cataloging, reference services; integrate event and training opportunities on core information services; and promote access to existing federal resources in legal and STEM knowledge collections.

A special lunchtime program will feature Joseph Genetin-Pilawa, former Kluge Scholar, Assistant Professor of History, George Mason University; Dr. Gabrielle Tayac, Piscataway Indian Nation, Historian, National Museum of the American Indian; and a panel of American Indian historians and cultural experts discussing federal and regional history and culture.

The program will conclude with a demonstration of the Indigenous Tribal Law Project, a free, online resource created to make tribal law more accessible and findable by providing comprehensive listings of tribes, tribal websites, and online primary source materials. Participants are invited to review a table top display exhibit featuring selected collection materials.
