GUITEAU

At 10:30 he took his bath and dressed himself for the execution. Dr. Hicks, after his visit, said that when he left Guiteau the latter was calm, being thoroughly sustained by his idea of inspiration. When he first entered the cell the assassin wept copiously and exclaimed the tears and emotion by saying that he was filled with joy at the prospect of the nearness of his relief from his persecutions. Yesterday afternoon, prior to Mrs. Scoville's visit to the jail, she sent him a bouquet, which without the knowledge of the warden or his deputy, was carried into the cell. Deputy Warden Ross passed through the corridor soon afterwards, and noticing the bouquet, asked who had given it to him. "My sister," curtly replied the assassin. The warden was about to pass on when he concluded the bouquet was worthy of examination, and by took it from the cell. It was handed to Dr. McWilliams, the jail physician, who carefully examined the flowers, and declared they had been drugged. Impregnated with some poison. He took the bouquet to a chemist, at 2 o'clock, this morning, for analysis, and at this writing it has not been returned to jail.

Before 10 o'clock the crowds had begun to assemble before the jail. Enterprising venders of lemonade, peanuts and cakes set up their booths under the shade of trees, and did a thriving business with the hot and thirsty crowd. The roads leading to the prison were thronged with stragglers of all ages, occupied conditions. One old couple, whose legs had been amputated below the knees, hobbled along on a pair of wooden pegs. Colored men and women composed the greater part of the spectators and as the space from the jail gradually filled the eighteen pieces planted themselves on the heads in fronting the jail and awaiting the excessive heat, prepared to wait until the excitement of the hanging should be over. Guiteau showed great nervousness and appeared greatly soothed when he heard the rattle of muskets on the stone floor of the rotunda. From that moment Guiteau appeared thoroughly overcome with emotion. His wife's family and second to be in great anguish. The scene in the rotunda, while waiting for the prisoner, was one long to be remembered. Soldiers were drawn on one side, and a long line of spectators on the other. It was understood that Guiteau was very much depressed, and it was expected his passage to the gallows would present a very distressing sight. The movement of officers about the jail door was watched with eager attention. After the death warrant was read by the warden, the prisoner became more composed, and turning away began to brush his hair. At 12:30 a loud steam whistle was blown at the work house which is near the jail. This whistle, usually blows at 12 o'clock, and by it Guiteau was in the habit in gauging time. The whistle, to-day, was, by special arrangement delayed, so that its startling summons might not come before the officers were ready. Two minutes later the iron gates at the end of the corridor clicked, and then Warden Crocker made his appearance, and a moment later the familiar figure of Guiteau was seen. His face was pallid and the muscles about the mouth moved nervously. Other than this there was no sign of faltering. The procession moved quickly to the scaffold, and Guiteau ascended the somewhat steep steps with as much steadiness as could be expected from a man whose arms were tightly pinioned. At the last step he faltered for a moment, but was assisted by the officers, who walked up on either side. Upon reaching the platform, Guiteau was placed immediately behind the door, facing the front of the scaffold. Capt. Coleman stood upon his right, Robert Strong upon his left, and Woodward directly behind him. Jones took a position on the north side near the upright of the beam. Warden Crocker took his position at the southeast corner of the structure. There was a slight delay, while the spectators were pushing and jostling through the door leading from the rotunda to the corridor, at the lower end of which the gallows was placed. Guiteau meanwhile gazed upon the crowd, looked up at the beam over his head, and quickly made a survey of all the dread paraphernalia. As soon as the crowd gained some degree of quiet Crocker waved to them to uncover and all heads were bowed. Dr. Hicks then prayed in these words:

"Our Father, out of the depth we cry to Thee; hear our supplication for the sake of Jesus Christ, Savior, who made full provision for us. Behold this, thy servant! we humbly pray that thou wilt deliver him at this supreme moment of his life. Let Thy light descend upon him; liberate his soul from the power that he may appear before Thee absolved by Thy great mercy. From blood-guiltiness cleanse him and us! Christ, have mercy on us! Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world, HAVE MERCY on us! Amen and Amen!

During the prayer Guiteau stood with bowed head. At the conclusion, Dr. Hicks opened the quiz and Guiteau, in firm tones, said: "I will read a selection from the 15th chapter of Matthew from the 25th to 31st verses inclusive." He then read in a clear strong voice and with good intonation, showing little, if any nervousness. Dr. Hicks then produced the manuscript which was prepared by the prisoner this morning, and held it before him, while Guiteau read. While Dr. Hicks was arranging the manuscript Guiteau exhibited slight nervousness, and moved several times from one foot to the other. He soon recovered his composure, looked over the sea of upturned faces and said: "I will now proceed to read to you my last dying prayer."

He then read in a loud tone and with distinct and deliberate emphasis the prayer before given. At several points he had paused and endeavored to empart increased emphasis to his words by the peculiar facial expression so often observed during the trial, when he was angered at something which was said or done. This was peculiarly noticeable when he alluded to President Arthur, and when he declared that this nation would go down in blood. When he had finished reading his prayer, he again surveyed the crowd and said, still with firmness, "I am now going to read some verses which were handed to me to indicate my feelings at the moment of leaving this world. If set to music, they may be rendered effective. The idea is that of a child babbling to his mamma and to his papa. I wrote them this morning about 10 o'clock. He then commenced to chant these verses in a sepulchral style:

I am going to the Lordy; I am so glad,
I am going to the Lordy, I am so glad,
I am going to the Lordy, glory hallelujah!

Glory Hallelujah!

I am going to the Lordy, I love the Lordy
With all my soul, Glory hallelujah, and that is the reason

I am going to the Lord.

Glory hallelujah, glory hallelujah,
I am going to the Lord.

Here Guiteau's voice broke, and he bowed his head and broke into sobs; but he rallied a little and went on with his chant:

I saved my party and my land,
Glory hallelujah!
But they have murdered me for it,
And that is the reason I am going to the Lordy;
Glory hallelujah, glory hallelujah!
I am going to the Lordy.

Here there was another interruption caused by sobs and emotion, which he was unable to repress. He wept bitterly and then with quivering mouth and mournful tones he went on to finish his ditty.

I wonder what I will see when I go to the Lordy,
I expect to meet splendid things beyond all earthly conception,
When I am with the Lordy.
Glory Hallelujah!

Raising his voice to the highest pitch that he could command—

Glory Hallelujah!
I am with the Lord.

This closed the chant. Rev. Dr. Hicks gave Guiteau his final benediction and farewell, saying: "God be the Father, be with thee and give thee peace for evermore."

The assistants then pinioned his legs, and carefully adjusted the noose about his neck. Mr. Strong placed the black cap over his head, and as he did so, Guiteau called out, in loud tones: "Glory! glory! glory!" Instantly the trap was sprung, the body turned partly around, but there was not the slightest perceptible motion of the limbs. When the drop fell a yell was sent up by the persons inside the jail. This was resolved outside by a thousand or more people who hurrahed lustily. There was a general onslaught by the populace upon the jail door; the officers were unable to withstand it, and a hundred people crowded into the corridor. Several seconds after the drop fell the body hung motionless. Then there was a slight motion of the shoulders and legs, due to muscular contraction. Three minutes after the drop fell the body was lowered, to be examined by the physicians. There was decided action of the heart for fully fourteen minutes, and the pulse fluttered two minutes longer. When the body had hung with the feet just touching the ground over half an hour, it was lowered into a coffin which was waiting for it under the scaffold. The physicians decided the neck had been broken. When the body was lowered, the black cap was removed and the face exposed. The features were pallid and composed, and about the mouth was considerable moisture. After the body had been arranged in the coffin, Warden Crocker ascended the steps of the scaffold and, addressing the crowd, said those who desired could view the body. Then the crowd of spectators was formed into a line, and passing between the scaffold and wall of the jail, viewed the remains. Some jail officers, two or three physicians and Dr. Hicks stood about the coffin. John W. Guiteau fanned his dead brother's face to keep away the flies. John W. Guiteau did not go up on the scaffold, but stood during the scene just within the line of the officers at the bottom of the steps. When the body was given to the crowd to view the body the scaffold was at once filled with people who curiously examined every joint and belt.

At 1.40 p.m. the lid of the coffin was put in place and the body borne to the jail chapel, where the physicians who were to make the autopsy were assembled. After the body was taken to the chapel arrangements were made to let Mrs. Scoville view it.

Guiteau, just before the trap was sprung, dropped a paper from his hand. This paper was given him by Warden Crocker, to be dropped by the condemned man as a sign that he was ready.

John W. Guiteau said to the reporters, just after the execution that he was glad it was over. "What will be done with the remains?" asked the reporter. "We will bury them here in the jail, where he will be safe," said Mr. Guiteau. "He will not be taken out of the jail."

The spot indicated by the warden as Guiteau's burial place is in the same court as the gallows, 50 yards from it. Guiteau, when he came out of the rotunda, looked calm and composed, but very pale. His arms were pinioned behind, and he held his head erect. He passed upon the crowd without flinching. He wore a black suit of clothes, and instead of a collar, a hand kerchief was thrown loosely about his neck. Those who expected a "confessing" or distressing scene were disappointed.
