INTRODUCTION:

The intersection of baseball and popular music is a rich component of the sport’s history and significance in American popular culture. Baseball music, when examined as a group, reveals the remarkable congruence between the evolution of the sport from before the Civil War to the present, and the musical counterparts that have chronicled in song baseball’s greatest moments. While the music associated with baseball has grown to span a number of musical genres since the 1850s, the sport’s intersection with popular music was solidified in New York’s Tin Pan Alley publishing houses. From the late 1800s through the Great Depression, the sheet music produced by Tin Pan Alley composers, lyricists, and publishers defined the American popular culture/entertainment landscape. While radio broadcasts and sound recording technology would eventually dethrone the sheet music industry, baseball songs from this era represent the earliest widely-distributed baseball collectibles. The cultural significance of these objects lies in their music and lyrics, as well as their elaborately illustrated covers, which furnish a factual and cultural history of our national game, its fans, and their heroes.

In addition to songs that are explicitly about the game of baseball, many songs in this bibliography reflect the interpellation of baseball into other cultural arenas. Titles like “You’re Hitting a Thousand in the Game of Love,” “I’m Making a Grand Stand Play For You,” and “I Can’t Get to First Base With You,” reflect the degree to which baseball’s vocabulary and rhetoric became part of mainstream twentieth-century American popular culture.
Baseball-related sheet music from the Tin Pan Alley era offers many insights into the game’s significance for early American fans, but these song titles also shed light on the complex relationship between organized baseball and notions of being and becoming “American.” In 1907, immigration to the United States reached its highest level to date, led by migrants from Eastern and Southern Europe. By making a claim for “national pastime” status, baseball became a highly visible space in which debates about who can become an American and what constitutes being an American took place. Motivated, at least in part, by the grassroots popularity of baseball in immigrant communities, the “national pastime” was a place where a range of European immigrant groups could display ethnic and cultural pride while also becoming part of the American multicultural landscape.

As print media, photography, and emerging radio technologies facilitated the dissemination/promotion of baseball across the United States, baseball players enjoyed newfound celebrity status. Players including Mike “King” Kelly, Rube Marquard, and Mike Donlin parlayed success on the baseball diamond with generally successful vaudeville careers. By the time “Babe” Ruth emerged on the baseball landscape, film and radio technologies made it possible for a baseball player to benefit from the economic opportunities of emerging celebrity culture.

While baseball in the African American community is largely underrepresented in baseball-related sheet music that came out of Tin Pan Alley, a number of newly-found works in the Library’s collections highlight early connections between baseball music and black communities. From one perspective, having songs about African American communities created increased awareness and visibility within mainstream American popular culture. However, these representations most often were created by white composers and lyricists, and existed during a popular culture era in which blackface minstrelsy caricatured and parodied black identities and experiences. One noteworthy exception is a newly discovered and relatively obscure 1888 schottische composed for the Cuban Giants, who were considered the... first African-American (not Cuban!) professional baseball club years before the Negro Leagues successfully organized and remained one of the premier Negro league teams until the end of the nineteenth century.

Although sheet music’s golden age began to wane in the 1920s, baseball and music intersections continued to proliferate. Songs about Jackie Robinson, Larry Doby, Roy Campanella, and Branch Rickey celebrated integration’s arrival in American professional baseball, simultaneously broadening the genre diversity within baseball music. In spite of continuing racial inequality, the contrast between earlier problematic representations of black baseball coming from the predominantly white Tin Pan Alley industry and later titles like Count Basie’s “Did You See Jackie Robinson Hit That Ball?” from 1949 or Sister Wynona Carr’s 1952 “The Ball Game” emphasizes the important role baseball has played as a space for disproving racial and ethnic stereotypes and expanding constraints on American identity.

While a significant majority of baseball songs focus on professional teams and players, a number of titles in this collection reflect the significance and popularity of collegiate, little league, and legion baseball. Additionally, as the variety of American entertainment forms grew and baseball became an established cultural institution, new avenues opened for baseball music. Sound technology in film created an entire genre of film or soundtrack music, and the development of the radio or television show genre, as popularized by figures like Bob Hope and Danny Kaye, also created new avenues for baseball to intersect with American popular culture. Items in this bibliography include conductor’s scores and orchestral parts for multiple Danny Kaye shows as well as Bob Hope’s 1978 salute to the 75th anniversary of the World Series. Additionally, single titles and conductor’s scores from baseball films and television broadcasts included in this bibliography, from the 1951 Angels in the Outfield to Walt Disney’s 1954 “Casey Bats Again” animated short, reflect baseball’s continued presence in American popular culture across a shifting technological and entertainment landscape, as well as its continued popularity for American consumers.

Western classical music related to baseball represents a small portion of this bibliography, but from ensemble arrangements to original compositions, the classical music selections that do appear again emphasize the diverse array of musical genres that have been influenced by baseball, from William Schuman’s 1953 opera The Mighty Casey to more recent discoveries like Charles Ives’s (composed in 1907 and published in 1977) Five Take-offs dedicated to Mike Donlin, Johnny Evers, and Willy Keeler, or Richard Danielpour’s 2012 Pastime for narrator and orchestra highlighting players Hank Aaron, Jackie Robinson and Josh Gibson. A new baseball opera, The Fix, composed by Joel Puckett with a libretto by Academy and Tony Award winner, Eric Simonson, will premiere in March 2019. Commissioned by Minnesota Opera, this work commemorates the one hundredth anniversary of the notorious World Series scandal of 1919.

The original 1908 copyright deposit for baseball’s greatest hit.

The goal of this baseball music bibliography is to provide a useful and engaging resource for a range of potential researchers. No other sport has come close to rivaling baseball—our National Game—in capturing the attention and interest of so many artists and composers across American music history. The Music Division’s original 1994 baseball bibliography included entries for 423 musical works with another 300-plus confirmed pieces that could not be located among our collections. In this updated edition, nearly 600 new entries have been added along with dozens of new verified titles for items located outside of the Music Division’s collections. Altogether, this bibliography includes over 1400 citations of baseball-related music!
In an 1889 conversation with Horace Traubel, American poet Walt Whitman mentioned Albert Spalding and his players had returned from their world tour. “How I’d like to meet them—talk with them: maybe ask them some questions.” He went on to describe baseball as “our game…America’s game…as much to our institutions, fits into them as significantly, as our constitutions, laws: is just as important in the sum total of our historic life.”

This updated bibliography brings together an expansive (but, still not comprehensive!) list of baseball’s musical hits from the Library of Congress’s collections. Whether you are a musician looking for baseball repertoire or an educator looking for primary sources to bring into the classroom, this bibliography is for you. If you are a baseball fan wanting to find songs about your favorite team or players, or a researcher studying American popular culture, music, or sport history, this bibliography is for you. NOTES ON THIS BIBLIOGRAPHY:

The idea of compiling a bibliography of baseball music was conceived shortly after the opening of a 1991 exhibit at the Library of Congress titled “Take Me Out to the Ballgame: A Celebration of Baseball in Song.” Although it was possible to display only sixty items at this event, the exhibit attracted many more enthusiastic viewers than anticipated. Evidence of the interest it generated among performing musicians, music publishers and researchers continues to reach us in the form of reference requests and acknowledgments in baseball-related publications and recordings.

Our recent 2017 exhibit “Baseball’s Greatest Hits: The Music of Our National Game” has provided the inspiration to revisit the 25-year-old bibliography that for some time has been considered incomplete and a misrepresentation of the actual breadth of the Library’s baseball music holdings. The completion of this updated edition was significantly accelerated and its content enhanced thanks to a summer collaboration between staff members of the Music Division and a Library of Congress 2017 Junior Fellow and baseball cultural historian, Katherine Walden, who was invited to spend a ten-week summer fellowship to assist in the updating of the original document.

As with the 1994 version of this document, we debated the question “what is or is not a baseball song, and who decides?” Despite the obsessions and eccentricities of baseball fans, not everything is or can be designated as a baseball song. For the purposes of scoping this bibliographic project, a baseball song is defined as a published or unpublished piece of notated music that is in some way related to baseball.

“Published or unpublished piece of notated music that is in some way related to baseball” encompasses:

- A song whose title or lyrics reference the game of baseball, significant baseball figures, or characteristic baseball expressions/rhetoric
- A song whose cover imagery indicates a clear association with the game of baseball (illustrations of baseball equipment, figures playing baseball, a baseball field, etc.)
- A song whose composer, lyricist, or performer(s) are directly associated with baseball
- A song that appears in a film or television production that is about baseball: more specifically, “about baseball” is defined as a production in which the game of baseball, baseball players, or playing baseball is a significant element of the plot, thematic content, subject matter, or character/narrative development.
“Published or unpublished piece of notated music that is in some way related to baseball” does not encompass:

- Songs held in the Library of Congress in a recorded/audio format only, and not as printed or notated music. (N.B.: Beginning with the Copyright Act of 1976, artists and composers were allowed to deposit sound recordings instead of notated music when registering their works for copyright protection; this change in copyright law means that many baseball-related songs created after 1978 exist in the Library of Congress’s collections only as sound recordings, not as printed music.)

- Songs that become informally, organically affiliated with particular teams (i.e. “Sweet Caroline,” “Na Na Hey Hey Kiss Him Goodbye,” etc.)

- Popular songs often played at baseball games; walk-up songs

- Baseball songs with PAU designations. A PAU designation refers to unpublished copyright deposits submitted in and after 1978. PAU materials are not part of the Music Division’s collections, rather they are in the custody of the U.S. Copyright Office.

In compiling the original and updated versions of this bibliography, a number of secondary sources, auction catalogs, inventories of special collections from other institutions, and the records of the U.S. Copyright Office have been instrumental in determining the existence of and offering descriptive information for a number of entries in this bibliography.

Of the newly-discovered baseball songs located among the published and unpublished copyright deposits, many have been cataloged and were incorporated into the Music Division’s general collection. For those that were not selected for cataloging, it is the copyright registration number and year of submission that make it possible to retrieve an item from the offsite storage facility.

Many of the baseball-related musical works published before 1923 have already been digitized as part of the Baseball Sheet Music digital collection. New items in the updated bibliography will continue to be added once they are scanned.

Again, although this updated bibliography cites well over 1400 pieces of baseball sheet music, it is by no means complete; even with the latest effort to update this document, the word “comprehensive” remains elusive.

According to Prof. Daniel Goldmark (Case Western Reserve University), Adelbert Hall was constructed in 1881 as the first building of the newly relocated Western Reserve College (which, for a period of time was known as Adelbert College). The song’s composer, who served as the first principle viola for the Cleveland Orchestra (in 1918), was credited with writing multiple college songs. The instrumental version of this sheet music does not suggest any baseball affiliation; however, there is a solo piano version of this piece, published separately, with images of athletes, including baseball players, on the front cover. A live performance of this work with Jimmie Noone was featured in the 1944 film Block Busters, which focuses on youth baseball in a suburban community. In 1926, Noone started leading his band at the Apex Club at 330 E. 35th Street on Chicago's South Side. His group was notable for its unusual instrumentation—a front line consisting of clarinet and alto saxophone (Joe Poston), with piano (Earl Hines), drums (Ollie Powers, succeeded by Johnny Wells in 1928) and guitar (Bud Scott). Noone and his quartet’s brief appearance in the East Side Kids feature film, Block Busters was released three months after Noone's death.

Their famous rivalry with the Brooklyn Atlantics resulted in a best of three tournaments in 1866, an event that drew crowds of “half crazed cranks” numbering up to 30,000! The old Athletics ballpark at 17th and Columbia in Philadelphia is immortalized in at least two lithographic images [see: http://www.loc.gov/pictures/resource/ppmsca.17532/] as well as on two baseball sheet music covers from 1867: “Home Run Polka” by Mrs. W. The Cincinnati Red Stockings ended their 1869 season undefeated with a fifty-seven game winning streak. After the Atlantics scored the winning run to beat the Cincinnati team and end their streak in the bottom of the eleventh inning, it was reported in the New York Sun that “…a majority of the people acted like escaped lunatics.” Gracious in defeat, Cincinnati’s Club President noted: “The finest game ever played. Our boys did nobly, but fortune was against us. Eleven innings played. Though beaten, not disgraced.”

Keywords: George Herman "Babe" Ruth. Professional copy. This song was composed in 1923, the inaugural year of the grand cathedral of baseball - Yankee Stadium - and the year when Babe Ruth helped the Yankees win their first World Series, defeating their rivals, the New York Giants. According to the Baseball Almanac, Ruth had finally beaten his post-season demons in this series, hitting three home runs, a triple, a double and two singles while batting .368.

Dedicated to the Base Ball Fans of America...” The verses recap the top teams of the epic 1908 season: the NL Cubs, Giants and Pirates and the AL Tigers, Naps and White Sox, all of which finished within one game of each other at the end of the season. Pennant winners were only decided on the last day of play that September, which included the legendary game with New York Giants’ first baseman Fred Merkle’s controversial base-running mistake that became known as “Merkle’s Boner.” See: https://web.archive.org/save/https://sabr.org/bioproj/person/372b4391

_Facsimile edition from Dichter’s 1954 publication, Baseball In Music And Song: A Series In Facsimile Of Scarce Sheet Music. The cover image shows a baseball field_ using the square (Massachusetts) field layout; a similar drawing appears on the 1867 cover for “Home Run Polka.” The song is dedicated to Lew Simmons, Esq., who was famous for his career as a popular black-face performer from the late 1840s to the 1890s and for his role as a baseball magnate who assumed the role of a player, a manager and part-owner of the Philadelphia Athletics. In the 1911 book Monarchs of Minstrelsy from “Daddy” Rice to Date by Edward LeRoy Rice, Simmons was identified as having one of the “longest black-face careers in the world;” and, according to the New York Times, he was "one of the best-known minstrels on the American stage.” [See: Sept. 3, 1911, page 1 “AUTO KILLS LEW SIMMONS: Old-Time Minstrel, Still on the Stage, Crushed by Heavy Truck.”] A more recent examination that expertly details Simmons’s merging of minstrelsy and baseball can be found in L. M. Sutter’s book Arlie Latham: A Baseball Biography of the Freshest Man on Earth (Jefferson, NC: McFarland & Company Inc., 2012.) An image of Simmons appears at:

Keywords: Tri-Mountain Base Ball Club of Boston. Facsimile edition. Dedicated to the Tri-Mountain Base Ball Club of Boston, champions of New England. According to baseball historian John Thorn, a tournament was organized in 1867 by the New England Association, in which thirty-nine clubs were represented. Mr. Moses E. Chandler “presented a silver mounted bat as a prize for the winning club, which was captured by the Tri-Mountains, who won, it is said, every game in which they participated. The bat is composed of pieces of wood from the John Hancock house on Benson Street, the Lincoln cabin, the old Boston elm, the apple tree under which General Lee surrendered at Appomattox, and the battleships Kearsarge and Alabama.” On the cover, the inscription on the trophy bat reads: “First prize, Tournament of New England Association, 1867. Won by the Tri-Mountain Base-Ball Club.” Also on the cover are the trophy ball, a cap, foul ball post with a flag and an image of an unidentified ball player. See: Dichter's 1954 facsimile edition, “Baseball in Music and Song: A Series in Facsimile of Scarce Sheet Music.” The Tri-Mountain team was first to adopt the New York rather than the Massachusetts rules of play: e.g., to pitch instead of throw the ball, to place the men on the bases, and not throw the ball at a man while running, but to tag him with it at the base.

Dedicated "to the Base Ball Clubs of the United States." Composer William Bullock was a successful British marionette show owner and producer in the late nineteenth century. He first brought a group of his performers to the United States in 1873. When the company experienced conflicts with U.S. management, Bullock returned to New York in 1874 to rescue the company. “The Base Ball Song” was composed for this short-lived U.S. revival of Bullock’s Royal Marionettes.

Two years after the Civil War came to an end, there was a revival in the publication of baseball sheet music with at least nine known examples. Only three of these pieces include lyrics, among them “The Bat and the Ball Song”, which includes obvious borrowings from the lyrics of other popular songs of the day such as famous “Hurrah, Boys, Hurrah” taken from George F. Root’s “Battle Cry of Freedom” (1862) and the opening line from the pre-Civil War song “The Old Granite State” composed in 1843 by Jesse Hutchinson. Also inserted into the song are a number of baseball terms, all set in quotation marks: historian Susan Reyburn claims that highlighting these baseball terms was likely done because of their unfamiliarity at the time and adds that “people who ‘muffed’ a lot were called ‘muffins.’”

Some musical selections included are: “House of David”, “Baseball”, “Baseball Boogie”, “Esquire Joe” and “Razzle Dazzle” (minus the lyrics by Ron Miller). This successful baseball film focuses on a team of enterprising ex-Negro League baseball players in the era of racial segregation. The character of Bingo Long is based on former-’Black Baron’ Leroy "Satchel" Paige. Early in his career, Paige would call in his outfield while leading in the ninth inning against an amateur or semi-pro team and strike out the side. Bingo did a similar stunt in this movie. Leon Carter is a Josh Gibson-like power hitter, even playing the same position (catcher). "Esquire" Joe Calloway is an amalgam of another “Black Baron”, Willie Mays (in personality, talent and fielding position) and Jackie Robinson (as being signed by a white team at the film's end). The Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars & Motor Kings were loosely based on the Indianapolis Clowns. See: https://web.archive.org/web/20180904194044/https://www.imdb.com/title/tt0074207/

Keywords: Boston Red Sox, New York Giants, Heinie Wagner, Larry Gardner, Jake Stahl. Composed for the World Series champion Red Sox of 1912. At the beginning, Boston was losing the Series; then, three outs away from winning the first championship held at Fenway Park (this was the inaugural season for this venue), the New York Giants “choked” and quickly lost it all in the final game by dropping an outfield fly and then an infield pop-up that helped the Red Sox tie the score and go on to win the Series, four games to three. The deciding run was scored on a sacrifice fly. “The last inning of the last game of that Series was quite a doozy,” Red Sox outfielder Harry Hooper related to the author Lawrence Ritter in the 1966 book “The Glory of Their Times.” “That’s one they’ll never forget.”

Keywords: Christy Mathewson. The lyrics of the song recap Mathewson’s greatness on the baseball field as well as his service to the nation in the United States Army's Chemical Warfare Service in World War I. It was during his time in the service that he was accidentally exposed to chemical weapons, leading him to develop tuberculosis from which he died in 1925. Mathewson is still regarded as one of baseball’s greatest pitchers and was elected into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1936 as one of its first five members. The Library has both the published and unpublished versions of this song; the cover of the published edition features a large photograph of Mathewson.

Keywords: Connie Mack, Philadelphia Athletics. Cover depicts an elephant atop a baseball symbolizing the globe. There is a ball player atop the elephant wearing Philadelphia Athletics gear and waving a pennant. This may be the first song that connects the Athletics to an elephant. Five years earlier, when sportswriters gathered around John McGraw for an interview, one of the questions was, “What do you think of the Philadelphia A’s?” McGraw responded, “White elephants!” “Mr. B. F. Shibe has a white elephant on his hands.” Research shows that McGraw made these remarks on July 10, 1902, the same season that the Athletics won the American League championship. The elephant connection was immediately embraced by the team and has endured (off and on) – from Philly to Kansas City to Oakland, where since 1988 the A’s returned the elephant to their uniforms after a 28 year hiatus. This return to tradition coincided with a new golden era for the A’s, culminating in three consecutive World Series appearances, starting that season. After over 110 years of Athletics history, the visual homage to an offhand insult, dropped to a group of reporters on a summer day in 1902 continues today! See: https://web.archive.org/web/20180904195208/https://www.toddradom.com/blog/elephant-s-together-since-july-10-1902

_Keywords: Cuban Giants. Dedicated to Philip Adams, Brooklyn, NY. The Cuban Giants were considered the first African-American (not Cuban!) professional baseball club years before the Negro Leagues successfully organized and remained one of the premier Negro league teams until the end of the 19th century. First established in 1885, the team claimed the title of “world colored champions” of 1887 and 1888; in the 1890s they barnstormed across the country playing, and usually defeating, the most competitive “colored” teams. Their New York Times team photograph is available online at: http://graphics8.nytimes.com/images/2008/04/26/nyregion/22874245.JPG [9/2018] No accounts of a composer named T. E. Townsend have been located; rather, it is possible that Townsend was a physician practicing in Woodstock, NJ when this song was written. There is a published account of T. E. Townsend, MD recommending the Wing and Son Piano company of New York, claiming that their Series 7 model in his doctor’s office was “the queen of the village.”_

Keywords: Los Angeles Dodgers. Cover features photograph of 1959 World Series Champions. This baseball song served as the catalyst in making the 1946 six-note fanfare and cheer (“Charge!”) one of the most recognized cheers in professional sports. “Da da da DUT da DUH – Charge” was first used by Thomas Luttgen Walker for his 1946 USC football team; from there, the cheer was incorporated into a USC Trojan Warriors Charge song in 1952. It wasn’t, however, until the 1958 Dodgers team (their first year in Los Angeles) adopted this fanfare as their battle cry and broadcast the “Charge!” cheer via radio and television during the 1959 World Series that its popularity exploded across the country. Horace Heidt recorded the Dodgers Charge with his orchestra right before the '59 World Series. Drafts of the lyrics, with annotations and edits, are held in a separate folder with the score. “The Dodgers Song” was composed to celebrate the summer of 1962’s particularly fierce pennant race between the Dodgers and the San Francisco Giants. First performed in July 1962 and then recorded by Kaye (a Brooklyn native and life-long Dodgers fan) that August, this song portrayed a fictional game between the two clubs that ended with a miraculous comeback by the "Flatbush Refugees". A large portion of the song parodies the music of the 1949 hit titled “Rag Mop,” composed by Johnnie Lee Wills and Deacon Anderson.

Keywords: Brotherhood Players League. "Respectfully dedicated to the Brotherhood Players League." Two different editions of this work were published, a “Schottische” for solo piano and a piano-vocal version. The Brotherhood League was established by players who were frustrated with certain team owners who included a “reserve clause” in their contracts, a provision that restricted their movement from team to team and affected their salaries. Led by star player and activist John Montgomery Ward, the Brotherhood of Professional Baseball Players formed in 1885 and led to the creation of the Players’ National League of Professional Base Ball Clubs (PL) for their lone 1890 season. Offering higher salaries and improved working conditions, the PL comprised eight teams: the Boston Reds, Brooklyn Ward’s Wonders, Buffalo Bisons, Chicago Pirates, Cleveland Infants, New York Giants, Philadelphia Athletics and Pittsburgh Burghers. By no means were the Giants the greatest team in baseball in 1895, barely earning a .500 record and finishing 21.5 games behind the Baltimore Orioles. Still, two marches were published for the team that year – the other being by composer W. A. Gardner and titled The New York Giants’ March.

Keywords: Milwaukee Braves. According to SABR, one of the best-known and simply best baseball organists was Jane Jarvis (1915-2010). Jarvis attracted most attention during her long tenure with the New York Mets (1964 through 1979). However, she first played for the Milwaukee Braves in 1954 and performed for both the world champions of 1957 and the National League pennant winners of 1958. In 1963, she moved to New York to play for the Mets; according to baseball writer Lee Lowenfish, Jarvis was hired because “We want to give the fans good music if we can’t give them good baseball.” See: https://web.archive.org/web/20180904202010/https://www.si.com/vault/1971/06/07/614282/in-the-mood-for-baseball

Keywords: Philadelphia Athletics, Rube Marquard, Connie Mack and John Franklin "Home Run" Baker. "Home Run" Baker was one of the best fielding third basemen and one of the Deadball Era's greatest sluggers. According to baseball writer David Jones, Baker "led the American League or tied for the lead in home runs every year from 1911 to 1914 and earned his famous nickname with two timely round-trippers against the New York Giants in the 1911 World Series." He is also remember for being one of the victims of Detroit superstar Ty Cobb, who spiked him in the forearm as Baker was attempting to tag Cobb out at third base. In game one of the 1911 World Series, Baker was spiked.
twice by Giants Fred Snodgrass yet went on to help the A’s win both the game – and the Series. From 1912 to 1914, Baker led the league in home runs and helped the Athletics win two more AL pennants and another World Championship in 1913. The song commemorates the historic game of October 1961 when Roger Maris became the first-ever major-league baseball player to hit more than 60 home runs in a single season. “Babe” Ruth’s record of 60 home runs had been set in 1927. The song employs baseball jargon to cheer on New York’s Governor Al (Albert) Smith who ran for president in 1928.

Keywords: Chicago Cubs, Johnny Kling. Lyrics are typed on a separate sheet of letterhead stationary with the title “White Rats of America.” In response to mounting exploitation from leading theater managers, a group of vaudeville performers met in June 1900 to address the critical need to form an artists’ union. Their union name was The White Rats (the word “star” spelled backwards) of America, similar to the British music-hall performers’ organization name, The Grand Order of the Water Rats. The word “white” might have reflected the Rats’ exclusion policy which included African-American as well as women performers. Included in the lyrics is a list of things the author would do if he had all the money in the banks: e.g., “[to] see that Johnny Kling would train and help the Cubs to win. Johnny Kling was an outstanding starting catcher who played with the Chicago Cubs from 1900 to 1911. Keywords: Lord Baltimores. Prolific song-writer Joseph Bryan Geogehgan, self-nicknamed the “travelling singer,” was an English music-hall writer/manager from Salford, who is likewise famous for having had twenty-one children by his wife and mistress. In 1872, an anonymous author set the “Lord Baltimore Nine” lyrics to Geogehgan’s musical air titled “Down In a Coal Mine,” and it was published as a broadside by Clinton S. Birch in Baltimore. The Lord Baltimores a.k.a. the Yellow Stockings a.k.a the Baltimore Canaries were nicknamed for their unusually bright yellow uniforms. Craig Brown, baseball uniform historian, cites several contemporary news accounts where the team's uniforms were harshly criticized, claiming their trousers were “bathed in mustard.” The Library only holds an arrangement of this work for voice and guitar by Jerry Silverman in The Baseball Songbook. Dedicated to Frank McMahon. The expression “We are the people” which begins the chorus of this song, is attributed to the controversial New York Giants manager Jim (“Truthful James” or “Truthful Jeems”) Mutrie, who reportedly coined the phrase in 1885 when he (falsely) claimed to have renamed his team: “My big fellows! There is a reference in the lyrics to playing “Old cat,” a game similar to baseball that incorporated the skills of batting, fielding and running bases. The game was first mentioned in print in the late 1830s and played throughout the 19th century; David Block’s recent research indicates that old cat games evolved alongside baseball. Skelly’s 1895 song does not incorporate the well-known musical quote associated with other versions of this song under the same title. (See Boyer’s band arrangement, described above.)

Keywords: Phil Rizzuto. The song lyrics do not reference baseball; however, Yankee shortstop and radio announcer Phil Rizzuto provides a dialogue in middle of the piece ("Funky background under dialogue") that uses baseball terminology metaphorically in the descriptive commentary of the song's sexual situation. The song was first released in 1977 by American pop artist (and New York Yankees fan) Meat Loaf on his iconic rock album Bat Out of Hell.

Orchestral arrangement "Commissioned by the Pittsburgh Symphony, the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, the Brooklyn Philharmonic, and the African American Cultural Center of Greater Pittsburgh." Songs for Hank Aaron, Jackie Robinson and Josh Gibson. An interview with the composer talking about this piece is available on YouTube.

Keywords: Pat Moran, Cincinnati Reds. This song commemorates the 1919 Reds who won the 1919 pennant with a winning percentage of .686, the highest since the 1912 Boston Red Sox. They went on to win the World Series five games to three for the Reds first World Championship. This was a tainted series, however, with the infamous “Black Sox” manipulating the outcome.

Keywords: Lowell Base Ball Club of Boston. This piece is a reprint of the ca. 1869 edition. Dedicated to the Lowell Base Ball Club of Boston, one of only three New England teams to have won the Silver Ball trophy, the other two being the Tri-Mountain Club and the Harvard Club. John A. Lowell, an engraver and respected umpire, commissioned the silver ball trophy in 1864 with the intention of awarding it to the best New England team. According to baseball historian Troy Soos, bands performed the Silver Ball March at the championship games; the winning team's individual names were engraved onto the Silver Ball trophy, which was then given to the victor. After a few years, the New England Association of National Base Ball Players determined that the fierce competition fostered by the Silver Ball tournaments detracted from the intended gentlemanly spirit of baseball and led to aggressive rivalries, secrecy in recruiting and financially compensating "amateur" players, turning the sport into a business! The trophy was consequently melted down in 1868 and the silver was sold for $19.46. Keywords: Mike "King" Kelly. Composed for vaudeville singer Miss Maggie Cline. Hailed as the most popular baseball play of the 19th century, “King” Kelly was not only known for his hook slide and for being the first player to successfully cut a base, he was also baseball’s first “matinee idol,” the first to grace the vaudeville stage, to sign autographs for his fans and a “superstar” who was the subject of the first pop hit record in America. “Slide, Kelly, Slide” was recorded by the leading recording artist of the time, George J. Gaskin, in 1891. According to baseball historian Marty Apple, unlike the usual genres of classical opera, or of patriotic and religious songs, this piece was “just a silly song that captivated the nation and helped make baseball more mainstream…. ” A facsimile edition is available as well: see Dichter’s 1954 publication, Baseball In Music And Song: A Series In Facsimile Of Scarce Sheet Music. *Possibly composed in July/August of 1907, although Mike Donlin did not play a single game during the 1907 season; his most successful years were with the Giants in 1904-05. This supports the idea of a slightly earlier date of composition. The piece was first performed in 1974 by the Paul Winter Consort. Written on the top of the manuscript source is an alternate title “Giants vs. Cubs” and “NY Polo Grounds.” For more details see: Baseball and the Music of Charles Ives: A Proving Ground by Timothy A. The only example of the baseball term “tally” appearing in a song title. According to the Vintage Base Ball Association, the 1860 rules for the Massachusetts Game state that the term ‘tally’ referred to a run; the score keeper was called the tallyman. Later in the 1860s ‘tally’ was slang for the cumulative run total of an inning or a game (as in “the tally stood at 5 to 4”). The cover lithograph includes an image of a ball game in the foreground and a large pavilion with crowds of people in the background. Besides the Music Division’s copy, an original 1877 edition is held in the Prints and Photographs Division at the Library of Congress. *Popular song unrelated to baseball yet adopted and sung with gusto by the loyal Boston American Royal Rooters throughout the 1903 World Series (as well as during the 1912, 1915, 1916 and 1918 seasons). This was the inaugural World Series between the American and National League, featuring the underdog Boston team against the more experienced and favored Pittsburgh Pirates. Boston prevailed, but, reportedly only with the help of this song; according to one of the Pirates’ infielders “We beat them three out of four games, and then they started singing that damn ‘Tessie’ song…. and the Red Sox won.” One example from this song’s verses in 1903 is as follows:

“Honus, why do you hit so badly? Take a back seat and sit down.
Honus, at bat you look so sadly. Hey, why don't you get out of town?”

The 1915 version of the song was discussed by Ty Cobb in his syndicated column: “It is pretty tough when people have to pay from $1 to $5 for a seat to see a ball game and be pestered to death with the terrible strains of ‘Tessie’ through an entire World’s Series.” [Philadelphia Public Ledger, October 13, 1915.] For the full story, see:

Keywords: Detroit Tigers, Frank Navin (owner), Mickey Cochrane (manager and catcher) and the entire 1934 Tigers team. (Bridges, Sorrell, Baker, Rogell, Hayworth, Hogsett, Fox, Hamlin, Greenberg, Gehinger, Goslin, Marberry, Owen, Perkins, Doljack, Rowe, Fisher, Crowder, Auker, Walker, White, Clifton, Carroll and Schuble.) The cover of this souvenir edition includes the first team photograph that includes Mickey Cochrane as well as a smaller photo of the “Tiger trio,” who may possibly be the songwriters and lyricist. When manager Mickey Cochrane arrived in Detroit in 1934 (at the cost of $300,000 to owner Frank Navin), he quickly infused his teammates with a winning attitude. Tiger historians claim that the 1934 AL pennant winners were one of the greatest teams in franchise history with a 101—53 record. After losing the ’34 Series to the Cardinals, they went on to win the World Series the following year, defeating the Chicago Cubs 4 games to 2.

"To the Una Base Ball Club Charlestown. Junior Champions 1870-72-73." According to sports writer Robert Cantwell, many amateur baseball clubs were still in existence in the 1870s, among them the Una Base Ball Club, based outside of Boston. Their 1873 victory captivated a Boston dance music composer named M. J. Messer, of whom nothing is known except that he wrote the Una Schottische in honor of this event. The musical work is described as vivid and lighthearted as the tunes from Oklahoma, composed almost a century later; Messer's dance aroused an upbeat enthusiasm that made it ideally suited for the band concerts that once accompanied ball games. Dichter’s 1954 facsimile edition also includes this work: see Baseball In Music And Song: A Series In Facsimile Of Scarce Sheet Music.

Keywords: Cleveland Naps; Adrian “Addie” Joss. This song, commemorating the brief career of Cleveland pitcher “Addie” Joss, was composed only days after his sudden death from tubercular meningitis on April 14, 1911, two days after his 31st birthday. Joss is remembered for his crowning achievement - winning one of the greatest pitching duels of the era at the end of the 1908 season. In his biography of Joss, Cleveland sports historian Scott Longert recaps the event: “On the last weekend of the year, in a wild, 4 team pennant race, Addie Joss tossed a perfect game [only the second perfect game in American League history] against the White Sox and Ed Walsh to beat the Palehose 1-0.” Former ballplayer turned evangelist Billy Sunday delivered Joss's eulogy at the funeral. "Joss tried hard to strike out death, and it seemed for a time as though he would win," Sunday declared. "The bases were full. The score was a tie, with two outs. Thousands, yes, millions in a nation's grandstands and bleachers sat breathless watching the conflict. The great twirler stood erect in the box. Death walked to the plate." Longert reports that the baseball community was so saddened by his death that in 1911 rivals and teammates organized a tribute game, an event that some consider to be the first All-Star game, to raise $14,000 for Joss's widow and children. Joss was inducted into the Hall of Fame in 1978 and a plaque in his honor hangs on a wall at Progressive Field's Heritage Park. APPENDIX D: A LIST OF SELECTED UNPUBLISHED COPYRIGHT DEPOSITS (PAUs):

The United States Copyright Office has retained custody of unpublished copyright deposits submitted after 1978. Among those materials are thousands of musical works, including songs related to baseball. Anyone interested in searching for unpublished baseball songs can visit the United States Copyright Office’s online public catalog, covering submissions from 1978-present at: https://cocatalog.loc.gov/cgi-bin/Pwebrecon.cgi?DB=local&PAGE=First

Anyone interested in viewing or requesting copies of the materials listed in that catalog will need to contact their office. [See: https://copyright.gov/]

To Inspect Copies: You can inspect copies deposited in connection with a completed registration in the Records Research and Certification Section. Some of these materials are stored outside the Copyright Office; contact section staff to determine how long it will take to retrieve the requested materials. Inspection hours are Monday through Friday, 8:30 am to 5:00 pm ET, except federal holidays and are prearranged.

To Request Copies: Only certain parties may obtain copies of registered unpublished works. Requests for copies of deposits should be submitted to the Records Research and Certification Section. The Copyright Office does not retain all works deposited for copyright registration. The Office will provide certified or uncertified copies of published or unpublished works deposited in connection with a copyright registration and held in the Office’s custody only when one specific conditions are met. [See: https://www.copyright.gov/circs/circ06.pdf]

Please be advised, this is not a comprehensive list of baseball songs held among the post-1978 unpublished copyright deposits, but rather just a small sampling of works deposited in hard copy (i.e., paper copies - not recordings) over the past forty years.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS:

Many colleagues have generously contributed their time and knowledge in order to make this bibliography possible: It was the distinguished musicologist and Music Division chief, Dr. James Pruett, who suggested that I compile a bibliography of baseball music after the close of the Music Division’s 1991 exhibit “Take Me Out to the Ball Game: A Celebration of Baseball in Song.” By the late 1990s an arsenal of new research resources became available with the advent of the internet, electronic databases and online digital collections and it soon became obvious how many baseball-related works were overlooked the first time around.

Completion of this second, greatly expanded edition could never have been accomplished over the course of eighteen months without the assistance of Katherine “Katie” Walden, who worked in the Music Division over the summer of 2017 as a Library of Congress Junior Fellow. Robin Rausch and Betsy Nahum-Miller generously shared their baseball knowledge with me as we co-curated the second baseball music exhibit “Baseball’s Greatest Hits: The Music of Our National Game” which opened in February 2016. Many thanks go to baseball historians John Thorn, Tim Wiles and Susan Reyburn for their valuable advice and to our current Music Division chief, Susan H. Vita, for her support and encouragement; to Damian Iseminger and his music cataloging staff; to Jan Lauridsen for her suggestions regarding the introductory essay; to Gail Freunsch for her technical and editorial support; and, to members of our amazing digital team – Karen Lund, Morgan Cundiff and Pat Padua - who oversaw the digitization of the newly located pre-1923 treasures. I must acknowledge the herculean efforts of Thomas Barrick, who spent countless hours locating hundreds of baseball’s musical treasures filed in a multi-storied warehouse packed with millions of copyright deposits; and, my deepest thanks goes to Kevin Lavine, whose editorial expertise, patience in proofreading and collegial support enabled me to bring this project to a close.
